

The Stearman Commitment: No Lobbyist Money, Just Oklahoma Values

How Wendi Stearman aims to break the cycle of lobbyist influence in Oklahoma City

As a State Representative, Wendi Stearman saw firsthand how Oklahoma City lobbyists and special interests have effectively "bought" many legislators.

Here's the dynamic: Lobbyists use funds for lavish nights out at some of Oklahoma City's finest restaurants and entertainment venues. These outings forge strong bonds between lobbyists and politicians, relationships the average voter can't compete with as they go about their everyday lives, far removed from political maneuvering in the capital city.

After establishing this rapport, lobbyists channel thousands into the campaign coffers of their new political allies. These politicians then use the money to convince voters they still align with constituents' values, when in reality, they represent the views of their lobbyist connections. Even

In Oklahoma City, lobbyists regularly treat lawmakers to meals of expensive food and fine wine. It's here where lawmakers are prepped for giving away your taxpayer dollars to the lobbyists' clients and lobbyists are groomed for hosting the large fundraisers that fill the legislators' campaign coffers.

Oklahoma's Conservative Paper of Record Highlights the Stark Differences Between Candidates in the June 18th Elections

Established in 1979, The Oklahoma Constitution, known as Oklahoma's Conservative Newspaper of Record, annually grades state legislators through its Conservative Index. This reliable tool allows voters to cut through consultant-designed, lobbyist-funded campaign materials that often tout a liberal-voting incumbent's "conservatism."

Taking a Stand: Why We Must Replace the Incumbent Senator

From 2020 to 2022, I had the privilege of representing our shared values as your State Representative. Like you, I am acutely aware of the perilous times we find ourselves in. Our nation is under attack from multiple fronts, and we can no longer afford the luxury of mistakenly electing those who fail to understand the motives of the determined enemies seeking to dismantle our way of life.

We must rise to the occasion and take action.

That's why I have published this paper and am delivering it door-to-door. Here, you will discover what the media and politicians are reluctant to disclose. From my first-hand insights, having served as your legislator, this paper contains observations on how our compromised "Republican" leaders are betraying us.

Our freedoms and our way of life are at stake. The rule of law is collapsing, replaced by a system of "legalized corruption." Large monopolistic corporations have formed an unholy alliance with big government, creating a new tyranny of elites who are plundering the wealth of our state and nation while it still exists.

As you will learn from this publication, our incumbent State Senator is, at best, ineffective—incapable of understanding or resisting the forces seeking to undermine our nation. At worst, she is swayed by the hundreds of dollars in personal gifts and thousands in political contributions she regularly receives from lobbyists and their employers.

I have personally witnessed how this money corrupts politicians in Oklahoma City. You've likely suspected as much, given that many of our legislators campaign as conservatives but then inexplicably betray those same conservative values once in office.

We cannot stand idly by and allow this to continue.

It's time to take action.

That's why I've decided to step up and do my part. With your vote on June 18th, I will replace the incumbent; and, to leave no doubt about my intentions, I will refuse to accept any gifts or contributions from lobbyists and their affiliated organizations.

Moreover, as evidenced by my 100% lifetime Conservative Index score from The Oklahoma Constitution—one of only two such scores in the publication's forty-year history—I have proven my commitment to upholding our values. With your support on June 18th, I will do it again!

Please join me in restoring genuine, unimpeachable, conservative representation to our legislature.

Illegal Invaders to Receive Oklahoma Licenses? Senator Daniels Approves!

America is under attack, and State Sen. Julie Daniels aims to reward the invaders with an official Oklahoma driver's license.

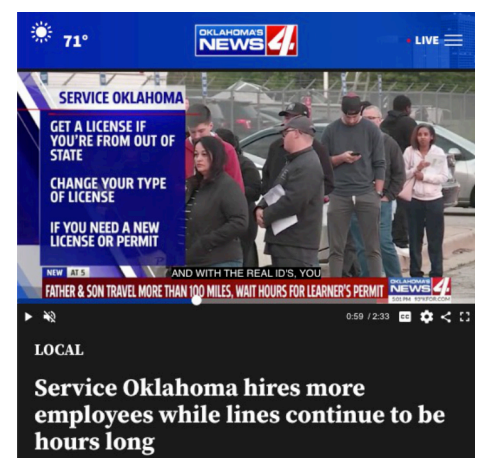

Illegal invaders from more than a hundred nations, including Communist China, are taking full advantage of the Democrats' efforts to destroy our nation's borders. This likely includes many criminals who, according to President Donald Trump, are being released from their native country's jails as those countries seek to export their criminal populations to the United States where they will likely sooner than later victimize American citizens.

If our State Senator has her way, these criminal invaders will soon be rewarded with a driver's license from the State of Oklahoma.

The implications of such an unwise approach are overwhelming. For instance, some legislators fear this opens the door to enabling illegal aliens to work their way onto voting rolls.

See ILLEGAL LICENSES,

Already hampered by federal 'Real ID' requirements, supported by Julie Daniels, the state's processing for licensing services has slowed significantly. Now, Daniels aims to green-light 33,000 more applicants—many will be illegal aliens.

Meet Wendi Stearman: The Conservative Underdog Who's Taking On Oklahoma's 'Legalized Corruption'

From toppling liberal incumbents, to closing down the Tulsa abortion factory, Wendi Stearman demonstrates the extraordinary influence one passionate individual can wield in Oklahoma politics.

The Stearman name is steeped in military and aviation history, famed for the Stearman Biplane that trained U.S. military pilots during World War II. Wendi Stearman, whose father was a Marine in Vietnam and whose husband, Tom, is a commercial pilot and an Air Force Academy graduate, embodies this

Sidestepping the Constitution: How Julie Daniels and Oklahoma Lawmakers Game the System

The Oklahoma Constitution was expertly crafted to deter the Legislature from creating "special laws" such as extracting money from taxpayers and distributing it directly to particular individuals or companies.

The Constitution's architects were obviously thoughtful and aware that such actions would likely trigger widespread corruption.

If special laws were allowed, corrupt actors would cultivate relationships with politicians, financing their election campaigns, and subsequently harvesting financial benefits once those politicians ascended to power and passed the special laws.

A profound quote from 1904, shortly before the approval of Oklahoma's Constitution declared that: "No man who depends on special laws for his prosperity was ever a patriot."

No man who depends on special laws for his prosperity was ever a patriot.

Over the years, legislators have strayed from this wisdom and abandoned the values of the state's earlier days. They have become exceedingly adept at very creatively crafting these special laws in an attempt to sidestep the prohibition.

Case in point: Julie Daniels and the Legislature just voted to award millions of dollars in benefits to the Oklahoma City Thunder.

These benefits are designed to last for the next fifteen years.

The Constitution bars the Legislature from concocting a special law that explicitly states, "we are going to give millions to the Oklahoma City Thunder."

So, how did they navigate this obstacle? They re-authorized a law that essentially proclaims "Organizations that align with North American Industry Classification System code 711211, and maintain an annual payroll of at least $2.5 million, qualify for millions of dollars in benefits courtesy of the taxpayers."

This highly targeted language effectively rules out the majority, if not all, Oklahoma businesses, apart from the National Basketball Association.

The fact that the Legislature would construct what is essentially a special law to favor millionaires is distasteful.

Moreover, compelling taxpayers to subsidize millions for this pro-CCP, anti-American organization is particularly egregious.

Furthermore, demanding that the residents of Senate District 29

Illegal Licenses

Knowledgeable policymakers have very low confidence in the ability of election officials to truly cure the voter rolls of those who may use the illegal alien driver's license number in their registration. The bill specifically prohibits the state election board from retaining information about possible violations of the voter registration law. This will make it difficult for the public to audit the election board to determine how many new abuses are taking place as a result of the new illegal alien driver's license.

Impact to the Legal Citizens:

It's unclear what the full financial impact on legal citizens might be if illegal aliens are granted official Oklahoma government identification. Policymakers estimate that up to 33,000 illegal aliens could potentially exploit this proposal.

In 2017, Oklahoma officials, including Julie Daniels, opted to comply with the federal government's controversial 'Real ID' data collection mandate. This decision appears to have hampered the state's capacity to efficiently provide driver's license services to its current residents. News reports now often focus on the long lines of Oklahomans struggling to receive these license-related services and its unclear if they will ever get a handle on what is going on. Adding thousands of illegal aliens to this equation is likely to further deteriorate the already subpar service.

Stearman also expresses concern that this form of identification could be misused to access a variety of taxpayer-funded services. She emphasizes that government spending is already spiraling out of control, highlighted by a more than 30% increase in state appropriations—endorsed by Julie Daniels—in just the last year.

Furthermore, issuing state IDs to those violating the law poses many unknown societal risks. One clear area of concern is banking. The growing power of cartels could potentially exploit Oklahoma's should finance entertainment for the Oklahoma City corporate elite is downright criminal!

This is just one example of many where Julie Daniels and The Legislature has determined who are the winners and who are the losers, notwithstanding the clear intent of the Constitution to prevent this type of corruption.

These types of giveaways occur with regularity and the powerful special interests who benefit from playing this game will spend many millions of dollars to keep the corruption going.

That's why it's very important for the voters to insist that their elected officials should reject the campaign contributions from these groups.

As our next Senator, Wendi Stearman will uphold the intent of the Constitution and will vote "No!" on this form of "legalized corruption."

banking system to launder money. With the Democrats' current border policy, these cartels are already seizing control of the border areas, posing an increasing threat to the safety and well-being of Oklahomans.

Additionally, if word spreads that Oklahoma is providing official government identification to illegal aliens—an action minority of other, mostly left-leaning states have taken—it creates a new incentive: 'A prosperous, low-tax red state is offering state-issued IDs to illegal aliens; let's go there.'

Then, there are the nationwide implications of this proposal. If Julie Daniels can persuade Oklahoma, one of the most staunchly Republican states, to endorse this measure, it will serve as justification for other states to follow suit. Advocates will likely argue: "Look, Oklahoma did it, and they're among the reddest states in the country, so you can too."

Stearman argues that Oklahoma's status as a red state makes it a prime target for sweeping leftist agendas. She says, "Those pushing George Soros-style policies know that influencing Republican legislators in Oklahoma can set a precedent for other red states to emulate. That's why it's crucial to elect officials who won't be swayed by special interest money."

Daniels Should Have Known Better

The illegal alien driver's license bill was sponsored by one of the Legislature's most liberal members, Oklahoma City Immigration Attorney Michael Brooks. Brooks' law firm solicits those who "do not have papers" to contact his firm for the purposes of potentially suing Oklahoma citizens for "personal injury" matters.

Stearman believes this should have been Daniels's first clue that this bill wasn't something that would be acceptable to the voters of our area. "It's hard to make the case that Daniels was just innocently 'confused' by this bill.

Whenever a liberal immigration attorney asks to give illegal aliens official identity documents, any reasonable legislator would have immediately hit their 'NO!' button."

The Real Reason:

Stearman suggests that Daniels wasn't simply making a mistake but was actively voting against our local values and betraying the voters to whom she campaigns as a "conservative."

Daniels has a record of taking money from and voting with lobbyist-represented groups. Stearman has observed this firsthand and notes that these groups have bought and control many Oklahoma legislators.

"As a rule of thumb, whenever the inexplicable happens in the Legislature, you simply need to follow the actions of the lobbyist groups. And, in this case, that trail leads directly to Julie Daniels and her inexplicable 'yes!' vote in favor of giving official driver's licenses to illegal aliens."

By contrast, Stearman will not accept money from lobbyists, nor the corporations that hire the lobbyists and funnel thousands of dollars into politicians' campaigns.

The Nationwide Implications of Our Vote on June 18th

While the bill did pass the Senate, it wasn't approved by the House; however, there are some very determined organizations that support this proposal and are likely to bring it back again.

Stearman believes the Senate District 29 vote in June will be the referendum on this issue.

If the voters of Senate District 29 overwhelmingly defeat Daniels based on this issue, we will send a powerful message to the entire legislature:

"Giving criminal illegal aliens a foothold in Oklahoma is a sure way to lose your next election."

This will likely spell the end for the driver's license for illegal aliens proposal in Oklahoma, and maybe even in the other red states that are sure to copy Oklahoma if the measure passes here.

Thus, on June 18th, the voters of Senate District 29, could be the deciding factor in this issue.

No Lobbyist Money

worse, some politicians amass such significant war chests that they discourage potential challengers from running, thus depriving constituents of electoral choices.

Based on her observations, Stearman believes this flow of money explains why some politicians campaign as conservatives but inexplicably betray these values once elected. She wants no part of this "legalized corruption." If elected on June 18, Stearman will reject all gifts and contributions from lobbyists and their employers.

Stearman suspects this influence accounts for many of the bizarre votes cast by Julie Daniels. For instance, Daniels has frequently accepted such gifts and contributions, including a recent $160 dinner at an Oklahoma City steakhouse.

One has to wonder what justifies this massive expense for a single meal. Lobbyists aren't paying out all of this money for no reason.

Moreover, Daniels' extensive list of contributors reads like a who's-who of major corporate interests, perhaps explaining her frequent support for corporate welfare that haunts our state budget, riddles our tax code with loopholes, and creates a toxic culture that completely perverts the free market.

This kind of behavior tarnishes our district's reputation. The residents of Nowata, Rogers, and Washington Counties, don't believe in this type of legalized corruption.

However, many also believe that no lawmaker can hold office without succumbing to this corrupting influence. Wendi Stearman aims to prove Nestled in Oklahoma City's swanky new Omni Hotel, Bob's Steak and Chop House has evolved into a new destination where lobbyists lavish legislators with luxurious dining experiences. This year, as session drew to a close, one influential lobbyist recently footed a staggering $160 bill for Senator Julie Daniels at this culinary haven.

Witnessing such extravagance firsthand, Representative Wendi Stearman vows to break this cycle of 'gift-giving.' If elected in June, she will refuse all such lobbyist largesse. Instead of wasting time dining out with lobbyists, she will instead be studying the upcoming bills and remaining on guard to defend against the frequent attacks on our values, attacks that are regularly compromising numerous Republican legislators.

them wrong. She believes that the voters of Senate District 29 will support her, even without a massive campaign budget.

By voting for Stearman on June 18, you're not just rejecting special interest money; you're demonstrating to the entire state of Oklahoma that it's possible to elect a lawmaker free from the corrosive impact of special interests.

legacy of service and sacrifice.

After Tom's military service, the couple chose to plant roots in the rolling hills of Washington County. In 2020, alarmed by the liberalism of the sitting legislator, Wendi felt compelled to restore constitutional representation. Unseating an incumbent—a rare feat in Oklahoma politics—she kept her commitment of governing according to the same conservative platform she campaigned on.

In her first term, Wendi was acknowledged as one of the House's most conservative members. She was one of only two Oklahoma legislators to earn a 100% lifetime rating from the state's conservative benchmark publication, The Oklahoma Constitution, since 1979.

One of her notable legislative feats was the passing of HB4327, a landmark pro-life law that not only halted all abortion procedures in Oklahoma but also elicited a personal condemnation from Kamala Harris.

Family is paramount to Wendi, a mother of six. She passionately advocates for parental rights, particularly in matters of health and education. She proposed the bill to cut Oklahoma's ties with the National School Board Association after it sought the involvement of the Biden "Justice" Department against parents and introduced a bill to protect children from vaccine mandates.

Guided by an unwavering belief in the U.S. Constitution, Wendi's political philosophy emphasizes individual liberties, limited governmental powers, Second Amendment rights, and sanctity of life. She views the Capitol not as a social club, but as a battlefield to defend Oklahomans from what she terms the "Administrative State."

Wendi is poised to once again unseat an incumbent—one who has consistently betrayed our core values—to revive true representation. Disturbed by the "legalized corruption" she's witnessed, Wendi is making an exceptional commitment. If elected on June 18th, she will reject the gifts and contributions traditionally given to legislators. Her aim is clear: to remain unswayed by lobbyist influence and steadfast in upholding her constituents' values.

Rejecting this money means that Wendi will be outspent in her election efforts; but, reflecting the military mindset of her family, Wendi is tough; she is a fighter. And just as she fought hard to successfully unseat an incumbent politician and plans to do it again, she will fight just as hard at opposing those who are contributing to the destruction of our republic, both inside and outside of the Republican Party.

As she campaigns door-to-door, Wendi is not merely soliciting your vote. She's seeking a partnership with you, the resident of Senate District 29, as together, we reject the co-opting forces of the special interests, and make Oklahoma the leading state in the protection of individual rights and freedoms.

A prime example of the insanity of corporate welfare in Oklahoma: Canoo, a California car company will potentially receive a staggering array of subsidies totaling well over $100 million. Yet, their stock has plummeted by 78%. This is another instance where politicians are picking winners and losers in the free market, but for some reason, insist on picking—the loser. Also, the State is set to award Canoo a no-bid contract for up to 1,000 cars.

This corruption circumvents the competitive process. Wendi Stearman opposes the corrupt practice of corporate welfare—policies that Julie Daniels regularly supports.

The Rise of The Surveillance State

In recent years, Oklahoma's 'Republican' legislature has considered, and in some cases even approved, unthinkable expansions to the Orwellian surveillance state.

From the track-and-tax ODOT pay-by-the-mile tax plan to the centralization of medical records—both of which have been enacted into law in some form—the legislature has consistently betrayed Oklahomans.

Additionally, a proposal by the powerful Speaker of the House to advance the federal government's 'Fedcoin' was approved by the House Rules Committee but, fortunately, did not advance further, after the proposal was exposed on Tucker Carlson's TV show.

These actions represent a betrayal of the 'conservative' platform that these lawmakers profess allegiance to when seeking election, only to abandon once they are in office.

For the discerning observer, it's now increasingly easy to envision a not-too-distant future where government tracking data could be used to levy transportation taxes or impose penalties on those still using combustion engines that exceed certain environmentally detrimental mileage limits.

These fees could be adjusted based on personal ESG scores, travel could be restricted due to environmental concerns, or penalties levied for exceeding a monthly travel allowance.

Violations of emergency lockdown orders, such as attending church services, could also be detected. The IRS could potentially use this data to audit the mileage claims of independent contractors, and the government might excessively prosecute those exercising their First Amendment rights to assemble and protest at an "un-sanctioned" protest that gets out of hand.

Moreover, medical records could be monitored to ensure the citizens have received the latest government-mandated experimental vaccination.

The potential for future abuse is extensive.

The foundation for this level of government surveillance is being built right now—by our Republican legislators!

We must change course immediately and elect new lawmakers who are wise, well-read and can understand what is going on. Those who are willing to expose these schemes—as Wendi has done with this publication—and who will work to undo what has been done, returning us to an era where individual rights and liberties were not infringed.

Driving Toward Big Brother: How Oklahoma's New Tax Plan Monitors Every Mile You Drive

Oklahoma's pay-by-the-mile tax pilot program symbolizes a concerning trend in which Republican lawmakers are aggressively amplifying the surveillance state, placing every aspect of our lives under governmental oversight and transitioning us into a new, frightening Orwellian future.

The long sought-after "pay-by-the-mile" plan, beloved by government bureaucrats, thrusts the government into the role of keeper of your transportation records. It charges you a tax for each mile you drive, consequently tracking your movement, everywhere you go. This plan is well underway in Oregon, a well-known blue state, and has been authorized for an initial pilot program in Oklahoma, a recognized red state.

Proponents of this plan are clearly attempting to leverage the bipartisan appeal, pointing to both a blue and a red state, in attempts to persuade other states to follow suit. In blue states, they will point out, "Look, a liberal state like Oregon has adopted this plan," while in red states, they'll claim, "Oklahoma, the reddest state in the nation is doing it, so it must be alright."

State officials are currently using taxpayer dollars to convince you that it's acceptable for the government to collect your transportation records and charge you a fee for every mile you drive.

Their campaign, dubbed "Fair Miles Oklahoma," posits: "As vehicles become more fuel-efficient, we need to create a new 'use fee' for using the roads."

While this argument might seem logical to those who aren't aware of state government finances, here's what they aren't revealing.

We already pay road user fees in the form of tag taxes and registration costs. However, these funds are often diverted by politicians for non-transportation purposes each year.

Recent years have brought massive increases in state government revenues.

This afforded state leaders with the opportunity to finally end the raids and do the right thing: redirect these motor vehicle user fees back to road-related expenses.

However, they opted to spend that money elsewhere. They allocated nearly 13 billion dollars, a colossal increase, yet continued to raid transportation user fee funds.

Now, state bureaucrats wish to convince us they lack sufficient transportation funds, and we need to permit them to track our miles and send us a bill.

Wendi Stearman has the wisdom to see through this Hobson's Choice.

"This is just one more example of how big government bureaucrats are trying to deceive the citizens into giving up our liberties by not telling us the full story," she explains.

Stearman, one of just 18 representatives out of 101 who voted "no" on the proposal, House Bill 1721, in the 2021 session of the Legislature, will continue to steadfastly oppose the plan if elected on June 18th.

Why Wendi Stearman Voted 'No' to Government-Controlled Medical Data

Wendi Stearman was one of just four house members with the foresight to vote "no!" on the effort to centralize your medical records under government control. Julie Daniels, voted yes!

Our health privacy rights will be on the ballot on June 18.

In 2010, a constitutional amendment was approved by 64% of Oklahoma voters.

The amendment was in response to the federal government's Affordable Care Act, commonly known as "Obamacare."

Central to this socialistic healthcare proposal was the ability of government to centralize medical data.

Oklahomans wisely recognized this when they voted to create the new constitutional protections. And, they took action.

Their new constitutional provision prohibited the legislature from making any law that would force a person to participate in a healthcare system that mandates the sharing of medical data.

Despite this, Julie Daniels and the Republican-led legislature appear to have tried to bypass this constitutional provision.

Senate Bill 574 and Senate Bill 1369 have set the stage for compelling numerous healthcare providers to contribute medical records to a government-managed, centralized repository.

This repository will store extremely sensitive, personally identifiable healthcare information.

This includes mental health records, current prescriptions, drug allergies, diagnoses, lab results, hospital discharge documents, and perhaps most alarmingly, vaccination records.

Earlier this year, acting under the authority of these new laws, the Oklahoma Healthcare Authority attempted to mandate that healthcare providers participate in the system.

Fortunately, Governor Kevin Stitt vetoed this mandate, after much public outcry.

However, these problematic laws are still on the books, and it's likely that the healthcare bureaucracy will try again sooner rather than later. Once Stitt leaves office, there's likely going to be few left in state government to stop them.

Wendi Stearman was one of just 10 representatives with the extreme foresight to vote against SB 1369 and one of four to vote against SB 574. Julie Daniels voted for both.

Stearman understands the many potential abuses once sensitive information is under centralized government control.

From hacking implications to the possibility of blackmail, every abuse is on the table as the government has proven to be a notoriously poor steward of electronic records. The array of potential abuses is unimaginable.

For example, in August

Once Stitt leaves office, unless these laws are repealed, there's likely going to be little left in state government to stop the health bureaucrats from getting their way.

2023, the massive MOVEIT hack compromised the data of thousands of citizens, including many in Oklahoma.

That same hack also impacted government entities in Louisiana, Missouri, and Oregon.

In Louisiana, state identification data was stolen, opening up the possibility that hackers will have access to drivers' license data.

This serves as just one more reminder of the importance of electing legislators who prioritize our privacy rights over special interest groups.

The election on June 18 will provide a referendum: Will we continue down the path toward an Orwellian future, or can we reverse course and protect the free society we inherited?

If you believe in the latter, then your choice is clear: Vote for Wendi Stearman on June 18.

Perfect Score

The index evaluates lawmakers on two fronts: their annual score and their lifetime score. This dual system tracks the voting habits of elected officials throughout their time in office. Often, new lawmakers start with conservative voting records, but over time, the influence of special interest groups, established government institutions, and other politicians can erode their conservatism, reflected in declining lifetime index scores.

In the upcoming Senate District 29 primary, the Conservative Index highlights a stark contrast between the two Republican candidates.

State Representative Wendi Stearman boasts a 100% lifetime conservative score. Remarkably, she is one of only two lawmakers, out of hundreds graded by the index since 1979, to hold this perfect score.

In contrast, incumbent Senator Julie Daniels has a declining lifetime score of just 72.

Her score plummeted in 2023 due to her 2023 rating of 60.

Daniels' low 2023 score resulted from her vote for millions in corporate welfare subsidies to the anti-American National Basketball Association franchise and millions more to a large, woke, DEI-promoting Italian corporation.

Daniels also voted to expand intrusive government regulations on businesses and overrode Governor Kevin Stitt's veto of wasteful funding for government-run television programs.

By contrast, the index has credited Stearman for her staunch defense of unborn rights, Second Amendment protections, tax reductions, and opposition to corporate welfare giveaways routinely supported by Daniels.

Stearman also got points for protecting female athletes, prohibiting Critical Race Theory in schools, reforming Oklahoma's election laws, upholding transparency and the state's Open Records Act, opposing new government debt, shielding students from mandatory COVID mRNA vaccinations, and restricting the government's ability to close places of worship.

Stearman explains that she is just getting started.

"When I campaigned for office, I committed to uphold conservative values.

Being one of just two legislators since 1979 to maintain a 100% lifetime rating proves that I've kept my word.

If elected on June 18th, I'll do it again!"
